Scribe Fireraiser

Sunday morning found 25 stalwart hashers gathered at The Carps, Westrip (despite threats of dire weather from the forecasters) for the mince pie hash. Caviar, standing in for GOM, called us to order, checked whether the bags and sheep's hat were present, realised we needed a mag writer and found one (me). Martin gave us the brief (and took a bit of stick about how much flour he and Gerald had actually used laying the trails) and got us on our way. (Now is the time to say the hares had planned and laid good trails under arduous weather conditions, well done hares). Our route took us left out of the pub towards Randwick, I think our route then took us along part of the Cotswold Way and through Randwick woods. The weather was actually good but the underfoot was treacherous. We basically did a right hand circle around Westrip and Randwick ably looked after by Martin. Very aptly on the mince pie hash all roads lead Marion's house in Humphreys Way, (Gerald must be rich, having the street named after him) The mince pie stop was ably overseen by Chris Dowding and Wendy Brown, Wendy had also made her garage available in case of rain. The refreshment had all been made by Marion, Sheena and Zandra and was given a good savaging by the ravenous hoard. When Gerald sent us off again he made sure we all had a bit of mistletoe to help with Christmas cheer. Back at the pub the après hash went down well, I was deputized by Caviar to thank the hares for a good hash (and they got a good round of applause for it). Averil awarded Blameless the bags for buying his wife a cold drink when she was freezing and wanted a hot coffee. We had a couple of Down Downs to give out but most of the intended victims dodged them by the simple expedient of not coming into the pub. Dylan got one, Musthashless (having left early to go and watch Glos Rugby), dodged two, one for being rude to Dylan as he won his and one for falling over. We still had one left so Boodoff got it by default because Elsie was the only one on the hash wearing a bit of Christmas Sparkle.
